Poem Pot

The Swiss singer Dalia Donadio sets with her debut Album «Poem Pot» to music texts of poets from around the world. This “poem cauldron” thus contains verses by Charles Bukowski, E. E. Cummings, Fernando Pessoa, Gertrude Stein or Robert Duncan.

Inspired by the rhythms, melodies, forms and contents of the poems, short musical forms emerge. Conceptual influences from improvised and contemporary classic music as well as sound aesthetics from popular music come together in Poem Pot’s exciting new combinations, jazzy touches always part of the game. Dalia Donadio’s music takes the listener to small islands of sounds which suddenly disappear again into the blue, developing their themes hesitantly and ending them abruptly. Thus, length and timeline of the various music segments hardly ever match standard song forms.

Furthermore, the density in its various imprints also shapes this process: harmonious density is replaced by harmonious simplicity, manifold rhythmic structures follow rhythmic one-dimensionality. All of this is driven together by the words that patter into the poempot. The intensive dealing of the band consisting of Urs Müller (g) and Raphael Walser (b) with the topics of language and music creates responses leading up to an exciting discourse.

Poem Pot is trio music was jazz, becomes jazz and plays with jazz improvises on what is composed gives word to music and gives music to words speaks finest, loud and sparse languages is silent but also rages in speech whilst being a music of words.
